Medical Report

Patient: Mrs. Alena Bank, born on 25.03.1978, residing at Tulpenweg 3, 10115 Berlin, patient number 235987, was admitted to our practice for a cholecystectomy due to symptomatic cholelithiasis.

History:

Mrs. Bank complained of recurrent right upper quadrant abdominal pain, particularly after fatty meals. Other symptoms included nausea and occasional vomiting. The symptoms had intensified over the last few weeks.

Findings:

An ultrasound examination of the abdomen confirmed multiple gallstones with signs of gallbladder inflammation. There were no signs of bile duct stones or pancreatitis.

Diagnosis:

Symptomatic cholelithiasis.

Treatment:

A laparoscopic cholecystectomy was performed to remove the gallbladder. The operation proceeded without complications, and Mrs. Bank recovered well from the procedure.

Follow-up:

Postoperative controls are planned to monitor the healing process and ensure that no further complications occur. Mrs. Bank is advised to adjust her diet to prevent future gallbladder problems.

Recommendations:

Mrs. Bank is advised to follow a low-fat diet and regularly undergo follow-up examinations in our practice to monitor her overall health status and minimize the risk of further gall-related complaints.
